Excerpt from An Open Secret: A Farce in Two Acts Scene. - A student's room in the Radcliffe dormitory, very barely furnished. Madge is seated at a table, R., busily writing notes, which she seals and stamps with a determined air. Enter Jean with a cheerful expression. On perceiving Madge's occupation, she stops short and watches her for a moment. Jean (suggestively). Invitations to a spread? (Madge shakes her head, and continues her writing still more rapidly; Jean reflects.) Jean. Deutsche verein? Cercle Francais? Science club? Class-day committee? Advertising agency for the glee club? (Madge shakes her head more and more impatiently. Jean sinks despairingly into a chair.) Jean. Madge, have you lost your wits, or are you addressing circulars for a firm? Madge (impatiently). Oh, do keep still, Jean. You've just made me say I was decomposing, when I meant I was discomposed. Here, you're welcome to any amount of this literature. (She tosses a bundle of notes over to Jean, and continues her writing.) Jean (reads). My dear Mr. Meade: Would you be willing to lend me a few of your rugs, and some sofa-pillows? I will take the best possible care of them, and return them by Saturday night. It would be delightful if you could get them here by Wednesday evening. Hoping that it will not be too much trouble, I remain, very sincerely yours, Madge Aphorpe. (Jean opens another letter and reads.) My dear Tom - (Looks surprised?) Is it all right for me to read this, Madge? Madge (looks up from her writing). Oh, yes; keep right on. If you come to anything you ought not to...
