Daffnrc: Salome, 1912, p. 223 ff. 2 O. Docring: Michael Pacher, pp. 98, 105, illustrates and describes a St. Johns Head supported on a charger by two angels, which was formerly in the Weihdach Chapel at Volldcpp, near Rattenberg, which is in treatment not unlike the head acquired by the Museum. 3 See Percival Lucas: Heathfield Memories, 1910. faun in white marble, probably a fragment of a relief from a Graeco-Roman sarcophagus. To this period belongs also a marble head of the young Dionysos from a statuette. Of the later works mention may be made of a series of five bone panels from a casket of the type ascribed to the Embriachi family, who worked in the North of Italy from about 1400; four of these reliefs are carved with four of the Plagues of Egypt--a subject not frequently represented....
